BWV 29

Performance Note

The conductor will note that this arrangement is free from any dynamic markings. This is intentional on my part. The various orchestral sources I have consulted all have the same lack of dynamic markings.

In researching this music it is clear, from both printed and audio sources, that the music of Johann Sebastian Bach is able to cope with a vast array of interpretation in style and dynamics.

The conductor is encouraged to listen to a wide variety of recorded versions before deciding on his or her own interpretation of this music.

In the printed sources which I have seen I believe that Bach has left to the performer what is the performer's job: to take responsibility for the sonic details and to find an interpretation that will make the spirit of the piece sound true and convincing, even though there are many possibilities as to what that might be.

To add any of my own dynamic markings would be to limit and diminish the possibilities to interpret this music in a myriad of ways.
